Temporal Relationship between Cancers of the Lung and Upper Aerodigestive Tract

Wei-Chung Hsieh, Yuh-Min Chen and Reury-Perng Perng

Chest Department, Veterans General Hospital-Taipei, Taipei, Taiwan

We retrospectively reviewed the chart records at the Veterans General Hospital-Taipei the period between January 1985 and December 1994 to examine the temporal relationship between cancers of the lung and upper aerodigestive tract. A total of 56 patients (54 males and 2 females) with histocytologically proven double primary cancers, with either lung cancer or upper aerodigestive tract cancers appearing first, were found. Squamous cell carcinoma was the most frequent histologic type of lung cancer (squamous cell carcinoma 27%, poorly differentiated carcinoma 9%, small cell lung cancer 7%). The incidence of lung cancer patients with upper aerodigestive tract cancer was 56/6412. There was no significant difference in the occurrence of upper aerodigestive tract cancer between non-small cell and small cell lung cancer ( $P > 0.05$ ). However, the incidence of squamous cell lung cancer with upper aerodigestive tract cancer was higher than that of non-squamous cell lung cancer ( $P < 0.05$ ). With regard to the location of cancer, the right lung was more commonly affected than the left ( $P < 0.001$ ). The locations of upper aerodigestive tract cancers in these lung cancer patients were as follows: larynx 24, nasopharynx 11, esophagus 10, hypopharynx 4, pharyngeal tonsils 2, oral cavity 1.

Are coffee and tea consumption associated with urinary tract cancer risk? A systematic review and meta-analysis

Background Narrative reviews have concluded that there is a small association between coffee consumption and an increased risk of urinary tract cancer, possibly due to confounding by smoking. No association for tea consumption has been indicated. This systematic review attempts to summarize and quantify these associations both unadjusted and adjusted for age, smoking and sex.

Method Thirty-four case-control and three follow-up studies were included in this systematic review. Summary odds ratios (OR) were calculated by meta-regression analysis.

Results The unadjusted summary OR indicated a small increased risk of urinary tract cancer for current coffee consumers versus non-smokers. The adjusted summary OR were: 1.26 (95% CI: 1.07-1.46) for studies with only men, 1.08 (95% CI: 0.75-1.46) for studies with only women and 1.18 (95% CI: 1.01-1.38) for studies with men and women combined. Neither unadjusted nor adjusted summary OR provided evidence for a positive association between tea consumption and urinary tract cancer. Sex through studies differed in methodology, the results were rather consistent. We did not perform dose-response analyses for coffee and tea consumption due to sparse data.

Conclusions In accordance with earlier reviews, we found that coffee consumption increases the risk of urinary tract cancer by approximately 20%. The consumption of tea seems not to be related to an increased risk of urinary tract cancer.

Keywords Coffee, tea, urological neoplasms, bladder neoplasms, meta-analysis, epidemiology

Accepted 12 October 2001

Over the last four decades, a number of epidemiological studies have been conducted to investigate determinants of urinary tract cancer.<sup>1-5</sup> These studies suggested that bladder cancer is influenced by environmental factors, such as cigarette smoking and exposure to industrial chemicals (e.g. aromatic amines), and by chronic infections with Schistosoma haematolyticum. The impact of coffee and tea consumption on the risk of urinary tract cancer is less clear, although many case-control studies and several follow-up studies on these associations have been published. Because coffee and tea are one of the most popular beverages consumed worldwide, the relationship between coffee and tea consumption and the incidence of bladder cancer is an important concern. Earlier narrative reviews on coffee consumption concluded that the evidence was consistent with a small positive association.<sup>6-8</sup> Steiner et al.<sup>9</sup> quantified this association in 1973 in a meta-analysis based on seven studies and concluded that the best available evidence does not suggest a statistically significant association between coffee consumption and cancer of the lower urinary tract. According to their narrative review, there is no positive association between tea consumption and urinary tract cancer, although a summary association has never been quantified.<sup>6-9,11</sup> The present study aims at reviewing all epidemiological studies up to February 2001 more systematically, to provide quantitative summary estimates of the risk of urinary tract cancer associated with both coffee and tea consumption, and to evaluate changes in summary estimates after adjustment for cigarette smoking.

Material and Methods

Search strategy

The study design has been published previously.<sup>12</sup> Epidemiological studies were identified by the principal investigators through a computerized Medline, Cochrane and Current Contents search on follow-up and case-control studies of all languages published

Forqueray Pieces de Viole (Paris, 1747): an enigma of authorship between father and son

Lucy Robinson

IN 1747, two years after his father's death, Jean-Baptiste Antoine Forqueray (1699–1782) published the Pieces de Viole avec la Basse Continuë Composées par M<sup>r</sup> Forqueray Le Pere (illus.1). He did so not only in a version for the viol but simultaneously issued a transcription of the same pieces for harpsichord entitled Pieces de Viole by Marin Marais (1656–1728) and de Caix d'Hervelois (c.1680–c.1755) on the same hand, which were all published in the same Third, the plain titles of the four pieces characteristic of Antoine's generation: gigue, muzette and bransle. Fourth, the theorbo transcription of the muzette.
